

How will you prioritise empowering young people to volunteer and take social action?

At The Wood Foundation youth social action is, and will remain, a cornerstone of our organisational strategy. It is an essential part of our grant-making activity programme design principle.

How will you open up your decision-making structures?

We will further grow and develop our flagship education programme the Youth and Philanthropy Initiative (YPI) as a powerful, equitable offer for young people to mobilise their voice and influence in support of the social issues they care most passionately about.

How will you work in partnership with young people?

We will champion the power and importance of youth social action across our education and third sector networks, collaborating closely with partners on opportunities and resources which empower young people.

How will evidence the benefits of youth social action?

We will report on and share learning in an open, transparent, and accountable way. Where opportunity allows we will further platform learning and impact via events and communications.

How will you recognise and celebrate young people's impact?

We will celebrate youth social action in a multitude of ways. We will amplify activism through events, blogs, and social media, whilst exploring new ways in which they can support and influence practice.
